How to read a discount term: the discount percentage is the reduction given for payment within the discount period, and the payment term is the number of days within which the full amount must otherwise be paid. State all three parts together whenever the discount is quoted, so no invoice is paid on a misunderstanding of the term.

2. Invoice requirements

An invoice will be accepted for payment only if it meets every requirement below. An invoice that does not meet them will be returned with the reason stated, and the payment period will run from receipt of a corrected invoice.

- Purchase order number quoted: [Requirement for the purchase order number on invoices]
- Supplier legal name and address shown: [Requirement for supplier details on invoices]
- Description of goods or services matching the order: [Requirement for the description on invoices]
- Quantities, unit prices, and total shown separately: [Requirement for quantities and prices on invoices]
- Tax shown separately where applicable: [Requirement for tax on invoices]

3. Disputed invoices

If an invoice or part of an invoice is disputed, the buyer will notify the supplier within [Number of days within which invoice disputes will be notified] of receipt, stating the reason for the dispute and the amount disputed. The undisputed part of the invoice remains payable on the agreed terms. Neither side will withhold an undisputed amount because another amount is disputed. If the dispute is not resolved within [Number of days within which invoice disputes must be resolved], it is escalated to [Name or role for escalation of invoice disputes].

4. Price changes and deductions

Prices agreed in the contract or order may change only as set out here: [Agreed rules for price changes]. No deduction may be taken from a payment except: [Permitted deductions from payments to this supplier]. Any deduction taken outside this list must be reversed and the amount repaid within [Number of days within which an incorrect deduction must be repaid].
